Towers, Read and Bellinger Break Through Crowds to Greet Wives

estowed yesterday upon America's naval airmen as they returned on the transport Zeppelin from their history making flight across the Atlantic Ocean.

Even the heavy downpour of rain failed to dampen or interrupt the Aremendous reception staged for Lieutenant Commander Albert C. Read and the crew of the seaplane NC-4, the first alreraft of any type to fly across the ceean. Through the blinding rain blimp, seaplane, bomber and fighting airplane flow to greet the returning airmen in one of the most remarkable demonstrations of flying ever witnessed in this city.

wirations of flying ever witnessed in this city.

From the rain swept waters of the bay the cry of welcome was caught up and echoed back to the transport as the slowly made her way, surrounded by submarine chasers, to her pier in Hoboken. There upon the pier was masted an impressive coremony—the government's official welcome to the aviators.

Here Rear Admiral James H. Glennen and Brigadier General G. H. McManus, flanked by a committee of officers, waited until the ship was tied to her pier. Back of them stood two companies of the 13th United States Infantry, with their band, a guard of honor in the ceremony.

Towers Heads Airmen

As soon as the gangplank was placed on board Commander John H. Towers, "admiral" of the NC seaplane division which started out from Rockaway on May 9 to fly across the Atlantic, came ushore. Following close behind came Lieutenant Commander P. N. L. Bellinger, who was in command of the NC-1. They in turn were followed by their respective crews.

On the pier the three crews were lined up at attention just as the band the recommend of the NC-1. They in turn were followed by their respective crews.

level. Residents near the plaza look upon the open streets as a real menace to the community.

"Traffic is extremely heavy around the bridge plaza," said the manager of the Hudson Hat Shop, "but there never was any trouble until city employes began ripping up the street. As soon as one spot is repaired another is opened."

As soon as one spot is repaired another is opened."

The approach to the bridge is not artistic, but, although cramped, seems efficient. Traffic patrolmen are on duty and keep the long line of trucks, passenger automobiles and cars running smoothly. Three car lines intersect at the plaza and two elevated lines rumble overhead. It is a noisy, business-like spot, which will be greatly improved some day.
